

Diana Castro Sandoval (Spanish nationality) is a professional with multiple experiences within health sector. She has a dentistry background and further graduated from International Health and Social Management which was developed between Innsbruck (Management Center Innsbruck, Austria) and Bangkok (Chulalongkorn University, Thailand). She has been working and has experience within several NGOs in Mexico and Guatemala within the area of cooperation and development with a special emphasis on health systems in transition. After she joined and collaborated within the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) on its regional office in Bangkok, where she collaborated within the health economics department and was working on the development on sexual reproductive health within the UHC framework in South East Asia. Nowadays ,she joined the EFPC as a Junior coordinator where she will be supporting and managing the activities that the forum develops, including dissemination and advocacy for the forum, organization of meetings and conferences ,developing strategic partnerships and so on.